Confessions of the Tooth Fairy

Chapter 1 by Kat Hy

I gently land in the young girl's room, observing the black walls and posters of her favourite bands. I slide my hand under her pillow cautiously, feeling for something small, sharp and hard. Aha! Found it, I pulled it out in triumph. A clean white tooth glinted in the moonlight...

'oMG are you the Tooth Fairy??'

Well sh*t, I took too long, the girl had woken up and shone a bright torch in my face.

Okay, I have a confession to make. First of all, picture how you think I look like, now add large circular glasses, thick, straight black hair and bangs and jeans with an over-sized red tee. No sparkles, no pink, no smiles just a plain teenager whose life is dedicated to Tumblr. Except with droopy wings.

CONFESSION 1: I'm not exactly how the stories describe me as CONFESSION 2: I wasn't always a fairy. You see, back when I was a 14 year old human being, I was obsessed with fairies. It was quite a childish obsession, really. Fairies at 14!

Then one night I was looking for a shooting star. I made a split second decision and wished that I was a fairy. A beautiful, kind and motherly fairy floated out of sky with a wisp of white hair. I was actually sure I'm a fairy.

she just shrunk me and gave me some moth-brown wings. Oh, I almost forgot. Then she turned into a evil black demon horse thingy and told me to bring her little kids teeth.

CONFESSION 3: I don't collect teeth and turn them into palaces or dentures or anything like that. I just give them to the evil horse demon thingy and it lets me alone. Once I didn't give it my teeth and chased me for a week. It was quite horrifying. I don't really enjoy being a fairy anymore. It just seems sort of...mundane.

Chapter 3 by Eltrocomanoco

CONFESSION 4: The magic world really exists but it's actually quite boring. You know, before I was... well whatever I am now my thoughts on magic where really different. I liked to believe it was like in the Harry Potter books, not the movies, they left out so much. I though there where wizards with pointy hats and charismatic living inanimate objects. In real life it's a weird mix of crushing mundane existentialism and whimsy.

Witches and wizards are just like humans, with jobs and bills and responsibilities. They actually don't use magic all that much since its such a pain to recite the long-ass incantations they half remember and brewing the smelly potions. Wands are a Hollywood myth and they find witches flying on brooms extremely offensive and ridiculous; it's safe to say they despise Halloween.

Zombies don't eat brains but are pretty rotten, Vampires are NOT like on Vampire Diaries, actually they can be really stuck up and boring. All "Netflix" this and "been there done that", all "I invented that like a hundred years ago" and "no I don't hunt virgins for their blood, rare stakes are better". They are so old that even they look young they still act like old people.

So far my best friend is this Werewolf I met on one of my runs for teeth. Oh! Werewolves don't transform all that much. Did you ever see the movie where Micheal J. Fox turns into one, it's kinda like that only scaled back a little and that you don't become cool just because of it. He is pretty nice, mostly just passes for a really hairy kid.

Usually your given a shift. I work from Mondays to Wednesdays, and Amelia, another fairy, works from Fridays to Sundays. Neither of us wanted an extra day to pick up teeth so we decided that day would be our free day. If your wondering why your teeth aren't always taken by the tooth fairy, that's probably why.

CONFESSION 6: I hate kids.

Everyone thinks that the tooth fairy loves children because she takes people's teeth and makes them into houses and stuff, but no no no, that is not the case. In fact, children are such brats to me. The only reason I take their teeth is because I'm forced to and I don't wanted to be chased by and evil horse demon again.
